STP Account

The Straight Through Processing or STP Account, is a type of technology used by brokers to electronically transmit trades directly to the market. Clients are sent directly to liquidity providers such as banks or interbank exchange houses via STP forex brokers executing trades on their behalf. Transactions don't go through a "Dealing Desk" - they go directly to the market.

Using an STP account, all trades will be routed first to the liquidity pool, and then all orders will be filled at the best possible price.

ECN Accounts

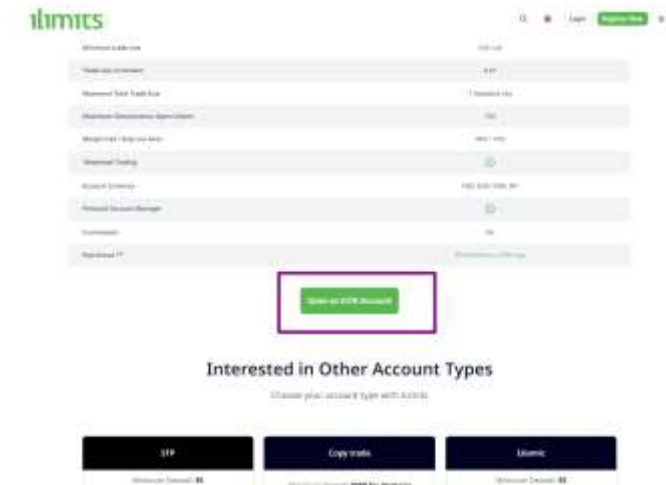

Electronic Communication Network or ECN is an automated component of trading, which connects traders to liquidity providers such as banks, brokerages and other traders. This provides access for traders to the financial markets with any account trading type regardless of the account balance size.

ECN Brokers are usually No Dealing Desk (NDD) brokers, meaning that client's orders do not pass via the Dealing Desk and this enables execution in direct connection between involved parties.

Being automated, the system publishes the orders entered by market participants directly to third parties and individual traders. The orders are executed automatically by pairing buying and selling orders at the best price available. This is an extremely efficient mechanism of linking all traders directly with liquidity providers and hence eliminating the middle-man in transactions.

ECN trading provides tighter spreads and more depth in market pricing. ECN broker consolidates quotes from many participants to offer traders the tightest bid and ask spreads. This also provides real-time market quotes and faster execution.

Cent Accounts

The Cent account is a trading account with the balance displayed in cents rather than dollars. Also, transactions are carried out in cents as well and not dollars. If you deposit $50, then you will see the balance of 5000 cents in the trading terminal.

The cent account gives you an opportunity to practice in trading with real money. The risks are minimal, as the profits and losses are calculated in cents. That is, risks are reduced by hundred times ($1 = €100).

Newcomers, who switch from a demo account to a cent account can develop a successful trading strategy can then switch again to the standard account to earn more profits.
